Smith, Esquire, in the City of Washington on Monday the Fifth of July, 1813: By Request of a General Meeting of the Citizens, and Published at the Desire of the Committee of Arrangement We are assembled, fellow citizens, to commemorate the great day which gave birth to our independence. In other regions, the multitude eagerly repair to splendid exhibitions, set off by the highest efforts of scenic art, to pay their homage to some mortal elevated by his virtues or crimes above subject millions; here freemen surround the altar of liberty, to pour out, with a simplicity characteristic of our institutions, the effusions of gratitude to the Ruler of nations for the inestimable blessing of governing themselves. In the one case man, in the other, principle is the object of homage. It is unnecessary, before such an audience, to dwell on the superiority of the one to the other, or to trace the contrasted influence of each on the moral character or physical condition of man. It is sufficient for...
