The game is set in the Vortis Massif of the Antwaris Galaxy, a region of space containing more than 100,000 solar systems (one of our finest on-line utilities, slated as a future release). Character generation is skill-based, rather than class-based, and it can be done on-line or unplugged. The game system utilizes a universal table for all dice rolls. Universe, The Sci-Fi RPG is not d20. Universe development began before the Open Gaming License (OGL) and the d20 System (tm, Wizards of the Coast) matured, and the designers had concepts that could not be captured in the d20 System. Many people have asked how Universe mechanics differ from the mechanics of the d20 System. For those that understand the terminology, here are the differences: In Universe The Sci-Fi RPG, characters are 100% skill-based. There are no classes: none. The skills (more than 200, but only about 80 will appear in the Primer) are structured in a prerequisite system, much as you'd find in a college catalog. If you want to design robots, you've got to first learn a lot about electronics and mechanics. None of the skill descriptions leave you hanging, either....
