Forgotten Books, United States, 2015. Paperback. Book Condition: New. 229 x 152 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Excerpt from Latin Prose Composition A new work on Latin Prose seems at first thought altogether superfluous, the works on the subject already existing being so numerous, so varied in character, and in many cases so excellent. The reasons, however, which justified their appearance justify also the appearance of a new one. Conditions are constantly changing, and these demand new groupings and new arrangement of old material, however excellent that may be in itself. The position of Classics in our schools has undergone in late years a radical change. In competition with other subjects on the already wide curriculum of secondary education, and with others clamoring for recognition, the Classics have entered upon a struggle which renders it necessary to vindicate afresh their supreme value as an educational instrument in order to retain for them even the most limited amount of time necessary to make them of any real value to the student. The commercialism of our age has stamped itself upon our educational aims and methods. The average student has no longer at his disposal the amount of time to devote to classical study that could be given to it in former years. We must adapt ourselves to the changing mode of thought and life, and demonstrate anew by practical results the essential value of the Classics. We must so adjust our methods that the student can accomplish the same practical result in considerably less time than formerly. It is more than ever necessary to show by the results of at most three years at Latin some solid foundation of mental training derived therefrom as the hope and promise of further study. It will be readily...
