Views of Kaffirs in a compound on a Sunday morning are given in Figs. 4 and 5, and Fig. 6 shows a group practicing at war. Kaffir labor is more plentiful to-day than ever before in the history of the mines of the Transvaal. At the present time there are about 169,000 Kaffirs employed at mines and works; there are also 26,504 indentured Chinese at work. All the mines are fully supplied with natives, and thousands more could be obtained if they were required. The companies have wisely taken advantage of this plethora of labor to insist on longer service in their contracts with the natives. Instead of...
